ECB on Network Linkages to Predict Bank Distress

■ Abstract

Building on the literature on systemic risk and financial contagion, the paper introduces estimated network linkages into an early-warning model to predict bank distress among European banks. The paper uses multivariate extreme value theory to estimate equity-based tail-dependence networks, whose links proxy for the markets’ view of bank interconnectedness in case of elevated financial stress.

The paper finds that early warning models including estimated tail dependencies consistently outperform bank-specific benchmark models without networks. The results are robust to variation in model specification and also hold in relation to simpler benchmarks of contagion. Generally, this paper gives direct support for measures of interconnectedness in early-warning models, and moves toward a unified representation of cyclical and cross-sectional dimensions of systemic risk.

■ Conclusion

Building on the literature on systemic risk and financial contagion, the paper introduced estimated network linkages into an early-warning model to predict bank distress. The approach applied in this paper estimates tail-dependence networks (Poon et al., 2004) from equity returns of 171 European banks in 1999Q1-2012Q3 and combines that with a bank-level early-warning model (Betz et al., 2014).

Beyond standard bank-level risk drivers and macro-financial indicators, a tail-dependence network provides additional information about market’s view on bank interconnectedness in situations of elevated financial stress. Thus, it can provide information of potentially vulnerable banks following an early-warning signal or a bank failure, and the potential for financial contagion and a systemic banking crisis.

Regulatory & Accounting Briefing

- The paper finds that the early warning models including estimated tail dependencies consistently outperform the benchmark models, which cover solely vulnerabilities coming from bank-specific, sector-level and macro-financial imbalances in order to predict bank distress events. These results highlight the importance of including measures of interconnectedness and proxies for contagion when building early-warning models.

- From a policy perspective, they underline the necessity for including information on the structure of the banking system to complement macro and micro-prudential analysis of individual bank’s risk. Overall, the paper provides early steps toward a unified representation of cyclical and cross-sectional dimensions of systemic risk and contagion risk.

- For future work, it is worth noting the general nature of the framework for combining networks and distress models. While this study is at the bank level, the same procedures would equally well apply at the country level or for another industry, such as insurers and other financial institutions. Another line of future work could focus on the use of the provided framework with a range of interconnectedness measures.

- In contrast to the classification task performed by early-warning models, for which “ground truth” exists and ex-post evaluations are possible, bank networks and interconnectedness measures do not have similar outcome data to steer modeling. Hence, the framework presented in this paper provides an ideal setting for testing the extent to which interconnectedness measures are proxying for the true channel of distress contagion.

You will find the history of rating regarding recommendation changes as well as an overview of the breakdown in absolute and relative terms of our investment ratings on our website www.disclaimer unicreditmib eu/credit-research-rd/Recommendations CR_e.pdf.

Note on the evaluation basis for interest-bearing securities:
Recommendations relative to an index: For high grade names the recommendations are relative to the "iBoxx EUR Benchmark" index family, for sub investment grade names the recommendations are relative to the *"iBoxx EUR High Yield" index family.
Marketweight: We recommend having the same portfolio exposure in the name as the respective iBoxx index. We expect that the average total return of the instruments of the issuer is equal to the total return of the index.

Overweight: We recommend having a higher portfolio exposure in the name as the respective iBoxx index. We expect that the average total return of the instruments of the issuer is greater than the total return of the index.

Underweight: We recommend having a lower portfolio exposure in the name as the respective iBoxx index. We expect that the average total return of the instruments of the issuer is less than the total return of the index.

Outright recommendations:

Hold: We recommend holding the respective instrument for investors who already have exposure. We expect that the total return of the instruments of the issuer is equal to the yield.

Buy: We recommend buying the respective instrument for investors who already have exposure. We expect that the total return of the instruments of the issuer is greater than the yield.

Sell: We recommend selling the respective instrument for investors who already have exposure. We expect that the total return of the instruments of the issuer is less than the yield.

We employ three further categorizations for interest-bearing securities in our coverage:

Restricted: A recommendation and/or financial forecast is not disclosed owing to compliance or other regulatory considerations such as a blackout period or a conflict of interest.

Coverage in transition: Due to changes in the research team, the disclosure of a recommendation and/or financial information are temporarily suspended. The interest-bearing securities remain in the research universe and disclosures of relevant information will be resumed in due course.

Notice: Suspension of coverage.

Trading recommendations for fixed-interest securities mostly focus on the credit spread (yield difference between the fixed-interest security and the relevant government bond or swap rate) and on the rating views and methodologies of recognized agencies (S&P, Moody’s, Fitch). Depending on the type of investor, investment ratings may refer to a short period or to a 6 to 12-month horizon.
